In December, 260 workers at Republic Windows occupied their plant for six days--a sit-in strike launched in response to the closing of their plant with only 3 days notice. Jobs with Justice coalitions along with other community, faith and labor activists from across the country mobilized in support of these workers, helping them win a settlement from Bank of America and Republic owners, including severance pay and compensation for unpaid earnings.

As the economic crisis deepens, millions of people face jobs loss and foreclosures. Join us in celebrating the successful resistance at Republic, hear from the workers who made it happen, and help us launch a broader campaign for economic recovery that puts Main Street before Wall Street.
